

CHRIS McCAVITT

MANAGING DIRECTOR & HEAD OF THE NEW YORK OFFICE

Chris McCavitt is a Managing Director and the Head of Nardello & Co.'s New York Office. Chris has experience managing complex private sector investigations for corporate clients and their counsel across a wide range of issues and geographies. Areas of investigative interest and specialization include litigation support, asset tracing, fraud, regulatory investigations (including cases involving the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act and sanctions regimes), trademark infringement, and corporate control contests. He also has experience managing investigative projects relating to due diligence and business intelligence gathering.

Chris has two decades of experience in the private investigations industry. Most recently, he served as a Managing Director in the investigations practice of a global risk consulting firm, where he managed complex investigations for law firms and corporate clients and also participated in innovation initiatives with its technology and government services divisions. Previously, Chris was a Managing Director at an international investigations firm. Chris worked his way up through the ranks of the private investigations industry, serving as an analyst, investigator, and project manager, as well as managing a research team of 25 analysts.

In an earlier phase of his career, Chris founded and led a risk consulting firm for six years that specialized in assisting US multinational corporations in managing risks and threats in emerging markets.

Chris has a longstanding interest in intelligence technology. Throughout the course of his career, he has led projects and initiatives that sought to apply cutting edge data technology to solve investigative problems and manage risks. Most recently, he has worked to apply the next generation of Artificial Intelligence and Machine learning tools to gather and analyze data in complex investigations.
